Spotlight on Complex Learners

Second Annual Conference

Dr. Todd Levine, MD presents to conference goers

More and more educators and parents are seeing children with multiple learning and sensory difficulties that create barriers to academic and social success. Special education professionals recognize these students as Complex Learners who require systematic interventions and individualized programming at school and at home. In response to this growing population, The Wolf

School has developed an annual Complex Learners Conference. This year's conference, Complex Learners: Bridging Assessment and Treatment for Social and Academic Success was held on October 15, 2016 and featured psychiatrist Todd Levine, MD and neuropsychologist Allison Evans, Ph.D. as guest speakers.
